Wildlife

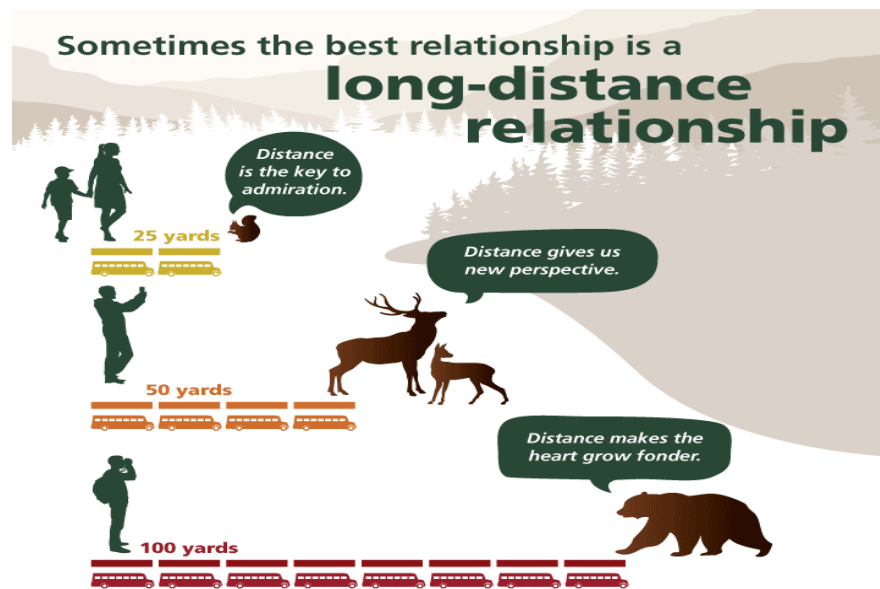

Bears and Wildlife

As temperatures start warming up, bears in Alaska will begin waking from hibernation and other wildlife becomes more active. This typically starts the beginning of April, but could happen sooner, depending on warming temperatures.

Tips for Encountering Wild Alaska!

- Do not feed wildlife
 - Proper use of receptacles helps mitigate risk
 - Intentionally or negligently feeding wildlife will get you ticketed/them euthanized
- Do not approach wildlife
 - Human contact can cause the animal to feel threatened & attack
 - Approaching animals can cause them to lose their natural fear of humans

 Especially stay away from a mother moose and young. Even if the mother is not in the immediate area, she will come back!*

Arctic Spouse: Building a Strong Community with Hopefulness and Connection

Feeling Bottled Up in the Arctic?

It can be hard and feel overwhelming when living in a new place, far from home, in extreme cold weather, where the snow plows can't seem to find the street you live on or you're stuck on the Glenn Hwy with kids screaming kids in the back seat. Join us in your neighborhood as we talk about Resources Exist, Asking Can Help (REACH) for Senior Spouses (or Advisors) and SFRG Leaders. REACH-S Session ONE is specifically designed for spouses to discuss barriers to seeking mental health care, solutions to these barriers, and good self-care practices. REACH-S Session TWO helps Spouses focuses on the Soldiers' barriers to seeking mental health care and teaches suicide prevention skills. To learn more, reserve a session for your SFRG, or to attend an upcoming scheduled session, contact Natasha Fisher at natasha.l.fisher.civ@army.mil or stop by the JBER
